SUNSHINE FOUNDATION CHRISTMAS

Our club had the wonderful privilege of giving 4 children and their families, a very special Christmas this year. We gave each family gift cards in the amount of $400. The family's requested what stores they wanted their gift cards from. Below are the photos and comments from each family. Thank you to everyone who made this possible for these families.

Gabriella is from Egg Harbor City, NJ Her mom wrote the following:

"First, I would like to thank everyone at SJRAACA for their incredible generosity. You truly made my daughter's Christmas so special. Gabriella had the best time being able to shop for herself and choose the things she has been wanting. Having control of her own shopping trip was such a joy for her, and she absolutely loved every minute of it. She walked into Walmart, grabbed a shopping cart, and immediately took off toward the toy section. She spent hours going up and down the aisles, carefully picking out toys she's always dreamed of and proudly filling her cart. Here are some of her favorite toys she picked out that day, with her absolute favorite being her Stitch animatronic. She carries it around with her all day and can sit for hours talking to it and playing with it. We are beyond grateful—thank you for creating such a magical and unforgettable experience for her!"

PRESIDENT'S CORNER

Frank Maurer

Happy February, SJRAACA family! While it might still be cold outside, the garages are heating up.

We know many of you are busy with winter builds and maintenance to get ready for the 2026 show season. Send us an email with a photo of your current 'work-in-progress' we'd love to see what's under the hood this month!

They say February is the month of love, and we all know where our hearts truly lie—  under a hood or behind the wheel!

Whether you're planning a romantic sunset cruise or just spending some quality 'garage time' this Valentine's Day, we hope you're enjoying the ride.

Don't forget our Swap Meet March 22nd. Stay warm and keep wrenching.

Warmly,
 Frank

FROM YOUR EDITOR

Hello from behind my computer! Wow this certainly has been an interesting January. Crazy weather! Can't wait for spring. Hope you enjoy this newsletter. I know many of you are getting those favorite rides ready for the spring. Don't forget to tell all your friends about our upcoming Swap Meet on March 22nd. The flyer is in this newsletter.

We had a great Friendship & Food at the Hollywood Diner. 30 folks attended and the service was great. Don't forget to send me those articles. Always need something new for folks to read.

MEETING HIGHLIGHTS OF SOUTH JERSEY REGION

January 5, 2026

The meeting was called to order at 7:00 PM by President Frank Maurer. Members stood for the Salute to the Flag.

The minutes from the Christmas Party meeting were read and approved.

Chuck Gibson presented the Treasurer's Report. The report was approved.

Sunshine Report - Bonnie Green reported: - Janet Erdner will undergo a skin graft next week. - MaryJane Shipman fell and broke her hip; she is now home recovering. - Mike and Maryann were home with COVID over the New Year holiday.

President Maurer asked if there were any guests or new members in attendance: - Jim Parave introduced himself, stating he owns a 1931 Model A pickup and is Bob Bowling's apprentice. - Scarlett Perdikousis, as a junior member, was unable to attend. Scarlet was approved for membership.

In Old Business:

Linda McFarland reported that 62 people attended the Christmas Party.

Ron Scott reported that all four recipients of the club's Sunshine donation sent thank-you notes and photos. Each family received $400 for Christmas.

Linda McFarland stated that the photos will be published in the next newsletter.

In New Business:

- Gary Green reported that 1,500 flyers were packed and mailed. He encouraged members to spread the word about the Swap Meet and related websites.
- Ron Scott reported on the Glidden Tour, which will be held this year in Dover, DE and hosted by the AACA President and Board. Organizers are working to keep costs low, plan numerous activities, and limit driving to less than 100 miles per day.
- Terry Shelton noted that Carl Constantino was scheduled to provide an update on the Frank Todd Memorial Show, but did not attend.
- A motion to approve the annual donation of $500 to the AACA Library Endowment Fund was approved.
- A motion to approve the President's expenses for the National Convention was approved.

Committee Formation

President Maurer discussed forming committees to better share responsibilities:

Membership Committee: Doretta Scott, Maryann Homola

AACA NATIONAL DUES is past due

If you haven't paid your $45 National dues yet, please get on line at aaca.org and pay on line or call them at 717-534-1910

SOUTH JERSEY REGION DUES $20 IS DUE NOW

Please pay Chuck Gibson at our January meeting or mail him a check to 691 Willow Grove Rd.
Monroeville, NJ 08343

Hospitality Committee: Linda McFarland, Annette Scott. Frank Maurer and Ed Counsellor will chair the car show committee. We are still in need of volunteers for the Budget Committee.

Additional Discussion

- It was discussed that car show trophies may be awarded in various categories in honor of deceased loved ones, provided by the family.
- It was suggested that the Car Cruise at Jeremiah's have a rain date. Frank Maurer will speak with Jeremiah about using the following Wednesday as a rain date.
- Gary Green reported having Franklin Mint/Danbury prizes that could be given out at cruises. Any car owner will be given a ticket when they arrive and Ed Counsellor will call ticket numbers, a winning ticket will be drawn at the end of the evening.
- Chuck Gibson and Michelle Hamilton discussed the possibility of organizing a tour in 2027, potentially in late June after school is out. An application would be required to request a $5,000 donation from National. Chuck Gibson will follow up with National and report back with additional details.

There being no further business, a motion was made and approved to adjourn the meeting at 7:30 PM.

Respectfully submitted,

Mary R. Maurer

MR. COMMONSENSE
(A FACEBOOK Article Copied with Permission)

I was one button press away from destroying an old man's life. The code enforcement officer was on speed dial. A lawsuit threat was already drafted in my head. I was ready to crush him.

Then I stepped into his garage and saw my thirteen-year-old son holding a blowtorch. My heart forgot how to beat.

We live in Silver Creek Estates. You know the kind: chemically perfect lawns, trash cans concealed behind matching beige lattice, and a HOA email within twenty minutes if your garage door dares to stay open too long. It's a neighborhood of enforced silence, gigabit fiber, and relentless, suffocating perfection.

I belonged here. Senior VP at a tech consulting firm. Fourteen-hour days staring at three 4K monitors, shuffling digital assets, always one misfired email from tanking the stock price. Soft hands. Italian suits. Life insured to the hilt.

Then there was Mr. Miller.

The anomaly. The only house on the cul-de-sac untouched since the Reagan years. Permanent oil stains on the driveway. Dandelions defying the lawn service. Garage door perpetually open, leaking Creedence Clearwater Revival and the grind of metal into our sterile quiet.

My son Ethan had been vanishing every afternoon for two weeks.

Ethan is "complex"—the word the school counselors prefer. Severe anxiety, ADHD, sensory processing issues. Wi-Fi drops trigger meltdowns. Routine changes spark panic. We've spent a small fortune on therapists, noise-canceling headphones, and tablets to keep him steady.

When the HOA's "Final Notice of Violation" landed—citing Mr. Miller's "Unauthorized Commercial Activity and Noise"—and I realized Ethan wasn't in his room, rage took over.

I crossed the street, the crumpled notice clenched like a grenade. I was prepared to lecture about property values, child safety, the sanctity of our pristine community. The protective modern parent shielding his fragile son from a chaotic relic.

I stormed up the cracked driveway, past a rusted transmission. The smell hit first: gasoline, sawdust, WD-40, old coffee. The scent of actual work. Of 1975.

"Miller!" I barked, rounding into the garage. "I've told you to stay away from my—"The sentence died.

It wasn't a chop shop. It was a shrine to mechanical history. Pegboard walls organized with thousands of tools, each in its place. Shelves heavy with carburetors, vintage radios, old lamps.

Under a single buzzing fluorescent, three boys stood around an engine block pulled from some long-forgotten swamp.

One was the kid down the block, recently suspended for fighting. Another was the quiet boy who avoided eye contact.

And Ethan.

My son—who recoiled from the "slimy" texture of mashed potatoes—was coated in black grease to his elbows. He gripped a heavy torque wrench clamped to a stubborn bolt. No meltdown. No rocking. No desperate search for his iPad. He was biting his lip, eyes narrowed in fierce concentration I'd never witnessed.

Mr. Miller, built like weathered granite, perched on a rolling stool in ancient coveralls. He didn't glance at me. His attention stayed on my son.

"Easy, son," he said, voice low and gravel-steady. "Don't force it. Force it and you'll strip the head. Feel the metal yield. Listen to the steel."

Ethan exhaled slowly, closed his eyes for a beat, then leaned in with deliberate pressure.

Creak. Snap.

The bolt gave.

Mr. Commonsense (Continued)

"I got it!" Ethan burst out, face splitting into a smile that broke something inside me. A genuine, unguarded smile. "Mr. Miller, I got it loose!"

"Good work, kid," Miller grunted. "Now check the gasket. Cracked? We make a new one. We don't replace. We repair."

I stood frozen, the HOA letter suddenly heavy and absurd in my hand. The garage wasn't chaos. It was rhythm. Purpose. The sound of things being mended.

Miller finally looked up. Eyes that had seen wars, hard winters, harder times. He watched the fight drain out of me, replaced by bewilderment.

"You here to take him?" he asked. No fear of me or the HOA. Just quiet fatigue.

"I... got a letter," I muttered, slipping the paper behind my back. "They say you're running a business."

He gave a dry chuckle. "Business? Haven't seen a dollar in twenty years. These boys drag their broken junk here. I show 'em how to fix it."

He rose—taller than I'd realized—wiped his hand on a rag, and extended it. I hesitated, then shook. His grip swallowed my soft office palm. Rough. Real. Terrifying in its honesty.

"Your boy," he said quietly, so Ethan couldn't hear, "he ain't broken."

"He has severe anxiety," I whispered, defensive. "He needs structure. Control."

"He's bored," Miller said plainly. "Brain running wide open, and you've got him parked in front of screens in a padded room. He needs resistance. Needs to feel his hands change the world. Needs to learn that when something breaks, you don't toss it. You fix it."

I looked at Ethan. He was laughing with the other boys, comparing grease streaks like battle scars. They were a crew. For years I'd tried to medicate and manage him into fitting the mold.

Miller had handed him a wrench and a reason.

"We live in a throwaway culture," Miller said, gazing at the identical, manicured houses beyond the open door. "We toss toasters, cars, people when they don't perform. But nothing's unfixable. Not with patience. Not with grit."

I stared at the notice. "Visual nuisance." "Unauthorized gathering."

I walked to the scrap-metal drum in the corner and dropped the paper in.

"Do you..." I cleared my throat, feeling foolish in my tailored suit and polished shoes. "Think the carburetor on my '69 Camaro is worth saving? Been under a tarp in storage fifteen years. Wife wants it scrapped."

Miller's grin cracked his face open, shedding years. "Bring it over. But you sand the rust yourself. I ain't your maid, and this ain't charity."

I stayed two hours. Ruined my loafers. Stained my dress shirt with 10W-30. Didn't check email once.

Walking home at sunset, Ethan didn't reach for his phone. He moved with a new confidence, hands blackened with honest work.

"Dad?" "Yeah, bud?" "Tomorrow we're fixing the chain on the neighbor's bike. Mr. Miller says it's shot, but we can re-link it if we heat it right."

"Sounds good." "Dad?" "Yeah?"

"I'm not scared there. My chest doesn't get tight. The noise... it makes sense."

I pulled him close, grease and all, hugging harder than I had in years.

We've engineered a world of effortless convenience: dinner by thumbprint, meetings in pajamas, instant everything. But in chasing "smart" and "clean," we've forgotten the medicine of dirt under fingernails. We've swapped workshops for safe spaces and wonder why our kids shatter so easily.

We raise a generation afraid of failure because they've never learned failure is just a stripped bolt—you back it out, lube it, try again.

The HOA sent another notice yesterday. Demanding the "unauthorized gatherings" stop.

I replied: It's not a gathering. It's a classroom. If you object, come over. We'll show you how to fix your perspective.

This weekend I'm skipping golf. I'm buying real tools. Because it turns out I'm the one most in need of repair.

Thank you to Mr. Commonsense for allowing us to share this story.
